

Washington, June 11, 1854.
At the White House.

Dear Wife:

I am now at the White House, with Fillmore, waiting to have a second interview with the President. He has been receiving, for the last hour, the delegates from the several States that voted for his nomination at the Baltimore Convention. I have no special desire to see him again, except that yesterday he expressed the hope I would call again; for I know he must be bored with callers.

White House,
Washington,
June 10, 1864.